“Your family may have owned the store, but it belonged to all of us. We all want to see it restored. It was part of our growing up.”

A ROSEVILLE AREA RESIDENT

Nothing today compares to the general stores of years gone by. They were the place for a community to find everything it needed, run by local families who cared for their community. The Koenigsfeld family legacy was built on this premise and on the steps of the Roseville General Store. The General Store was home base to three generations of the Koenigsfeld family. It was also a place for people from across the area to buy supplies; from food, gas, ice cream, work gloves, animal feed, to so much more. But more importantly, it was a place to gather, see neighbors, swap stories and jokes, and be welcomed in by the family.

The building was originally built to be a general store in 1903, later becoming a residence. In 1932, Peter and Dora Koenigsfeld and their adult son, Lawrence, obtained ownership and reopened the Roseville General Store in Floyd County.

Lawrence delivered groceries to local farms, and met a neighbor, Marcella Marzen. The two married in 1941 and were blessed with 11 children: Jim, Joseph, Jerome, Mary Ann, Patricia, Al, Gene, Richard, Regina, Rosalie, and Julie. In 1945, after Peter's death, Lawrence and his family continued running the store. They lived and raised their family in their home across from the store on Hwy 14 for 57 years. All the children worked in the store at one point in their lives.

A devastating tornado ripped through nearby Charles City in 1968 and demand for supplies decimated the inventory of the Roseville General Store. Lawrence was of retirement age and at this time decided to close its doors. Even though the building sat empty for 40 years, it was never forgotten by the people in the area. One local resident told the family, “Your family may have owned the store, but it belonged to all of us. We all want to see it restored. It was part of our growing up.”

The Roseville General Store supported the Koenigsfeld family and was an important cog of the local community. The family appreciated the loyal customers in their tightly knit farming community. To show appreciation and preserve a piece of local history and pride, the family has moved the restored building to the Cedar Valley Engine Club grounds, three miles north of its original location. The Cedar Valley Engine Club shares the vision of preserving and exhibiting local heritage and history of the area for future generations. (cont. on back)

About the Roseville General Store

The Roseville General Store first opened in 1903. The Koenigsfeld family owned and operated the store beginning in 1932 until they closed its doors in 1968. The Roseville General Store served as a gathering point that drew people from all around the area. The store continues to have historical significance to Floyd County and the Koenigsfeld family.

The Roseville General Store rests on the grounds of the Cedar Valley Engine Club and is maintained by the Koenigsfeld family. The store draws visitors from across the United States. The endowment fund will support the preservation of the store so it can continue to serve as an educational reminder of rural Iowa history.
